Tule Patrick roll'd out of his crib in a pet, And he paked at the fire, but the fire was all welt and it laughoil at O'Norl, who was poking away. Yo light his ould lamp, to go look for the day. "The snow wiff not blaze," said the ghost to O'Neel; Vers cannot set fire to the bottom and bill." Tain he wink'd at O'Neel, wid his thumb on his nose, White Patrick stood shiverin, frighten'd and froze. Och, morther,' he whisper'd, 'I'm hurted, I'm dead, use the language of a modern bard-Healy Virgin, persect me I' he knelt down and pray'd, Now Patrick O'Neel,' said the ghost, wid a smile, "Confess ver big sine like a good little chile: Last night yees wer dihrunk, on ould whisky, ye know,

I is a shame hf yees, now to dthrinkin it so; The wrong to be takin' the pledge of the praste, hin be dthrinkin' an rowl in the mud like a baste; Your went to the church wid yer hat in yer hand, Yesseried like the child that is bate wid the rod, And year yowed yer'd be sober and carry the hod; But, aviek, you've bin dthrinkin' aguin, like a fool, Wid that murdtherin' Glavin an' sottish O'Tool; That murdtherin' 'far down' who lives on the fist, Who broke his wife's head wid the heel of the pot; Turned his childer adrift in the cowld winter night, To die on the snow drift, or live as they might; Sowld his cow to buy whisky, his pig to buy rum, Sowid his shanty and turned himself out of a home; Sowld his table and chair, his bed and his bedding, The things that his wife brought in at the wedding; To the divil-the rum seller's consin-O'Neel. Now, thanks to 'owld whisky,' the pigs are all dead; And the poor gentle cow could not open the door; Now, thanks to 'owld whisky,' the cow is no more. The gace an' the ducks, wid the snew on ther backs, Wer so cowld that they eried with sorrowful quacks; Thouks to 'owld whisky,' thoy'll niver come back. Year region to the cellar an' opened the door, Wid the drunk in yer head an, yer hind-side before; Year sat down by the enbhage an spred yer hands wide, And functed yerself at yer own fire-side; And yer store of paraties and cabbage is froze,"

Wid a look of deep surrow, Patrick he said:

An' your shanty is last in the snow-drift, O'Neel.

Ha! Patrick O'Neel, your will wish ye wer dead,

The bottom bas risco as high as the bill,

An left ye to die on yer cowld shanty floor.'

And found, to his joy, it was only a drame.

Thin Patrick laped up, wid a horrible scrame,
